Sanborn 1910 Fire Map

Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division, Sanborn Maps Collection

Comparing the 1905 and 1910 Sanborn Fire Maps, it can be seen that the 180 HP steam engine, 2200 volt AC dynamo, and the 50' chimneys for the electric plant had been removed and the 80 HP steam engine was used to power a planing mill. The configuration of the flour mill had not been changed: There was a corn crusher in the basement; 4 double roller mills, a corn roll, 2 hopper scales, 1 packer, and 1 run of stone were on the first floor, 1 bran duster, 1 purifier, 1 suction hose, and 2 separators were on the second floor; and 3 reels, 1 scourer, 1 purifier, 3 s Salenm sifters, and 1tubular dust collector were on the third floor. The mill was powered by coal and steam and had electric lights. Fire protection was 10 barrels of water and 20 round bottom pails.

After the Lewisburg Milling & Electric Co. was sold to Blue Grass Milling in 1907, the business changed hands many times before Rosalie Detch sold it to the Old Red Mill in 1961. The products and services that Bluegrass Milling provided over the years reflected the changing agricultural practices in the Greenbrier Valley. In 1909 there were 20,000 acres of corn and wheat grown in the Greenbrier Valley (1), but farms were switching from producing grain to raising livestock. In 1925, the Greenbrier Division of the C&O Railroad loaded 891 cars of livestock from 7 stations along the Greenbrier River Division and cattle shipments continued until after WW II. There were livestock pens with watering facilities at North Caldwell and Renick. The railroad also delivered various farm supplies to the stations along the river (2). Over the years, advertisements for the Bluegrass Milling Company illustrated the transition from producing wheat flour to grinding grain for livestock feed to selling farm machinery.

Today, approximately 800 farms in the Greenbrier Valley raise approximately 47,000 head of cattle annually with the pastures used for grazing or growing hay or corn for feed (3). Grain is still grown here with approximately 400 acres of corn and soybeans planted along Houfnagle Road. Needless to say, the grain is not processed or used locally but enters the commercial grain market.
